Information and definitions of the services provided

Estimated maximum speed

Technology	Data download	Data upload
2G	0,2 Mb/s	0,1 Mb/s
3G	20 Mb/s	5,76 Mb/s
LTE	20 Mb/s	5,76 Mb/s

In the event of a successful connection of the end user, ha-vel internet provides the end user—given the uncontrollable factors listed below—a minimum guaranteed speed of 64 kb/s for downloading data and 64 kb/s for uploading data.

Transferred data includes data sent in both directions, with the total volume measured at the physical layer.

When using other services simultaneously, apart from internet access services, the guaranteed quality of the mobile data service may be reduced.

ha-vel internet s.r.o. undertakes to provide the service at the highest possible quality. However, the achievable speed of the provided service depends on many factors—general factors beyond the control of ha-vel internet and its partners (mobile network operators) or yourself—as well as factors the end user can directly influence.

Factors affecting service quality include in particular:

- Technology used
- Level of signal coverage
- Device the end user uses for connection
- Performance of the transmitter through which the end user accesses the service
- Weather
- Vegetation
- Artificial horizons
- Interference from buildings under construction
- Natural disasters
- Characteristics of the building where the end user uses the service
- New construction
- Location of the end device
- Frequency band
- Signal propagation path
- Random concentration of end users
- Sharing capacity by simultaneously connecting multiple end devices
- In the case of roaming services, intervention by the roaming partner through which the end user uses services abroad

Deviation from advertised speed

A significant continuous deviation from the advertised download or upload speed is considered to be a deviation that causes a sustained drop in the performance of the internet access service, i.e., a drop in the actually achieved speed corresponding to measured TCP throughput to less than 25% of the advertised speed for a period longer than 40 minutes.

A significant recurring deviation from the advertised download or upload speed is considered to be a deviation where there are at least five drops in the actually achieved speed corresponding to measured TCP throughput to less than 25% of the advertised speed for a period equal to or longer than 2 minutes within a 60-minute timeframe.
